MEMORIES OF PASTI

NOT DREAMS OF FUTURE LONDON, August 22.—"From my fairly intimate knowledge of the Japanese. I felt certain that as soon as war broke out they would join in driving the Germans out of Klauchau, said Sir Valentine Chirol, former director of the foreign department of the Times, in a statement to-night.

Sir Valentine is looked upon as an authority, whose words carry weight in all the chancellories of Europe.

"The Japanese," he continued "probably would have done it even if the had been no Anglo-Japanese treaty and even if the Japanese government had titled to hold back, popular feeling would have insisted. The share which Germany took with Russia and Prance in compelling the Japanese to evacuate Port Arthur in 1895, after their victories over China, never has been forgotten or forgiven.

"Compare, too, the text of Japan's ultimatum addressed by Germany to Germany with the text of the ultimatum addressed by Germany to Japan in 1895. It is clearly a direct paraphrase. The curious expression that the Japanese government believes it to be its duty to give advice to the imperial Germany poernment to withdraw from Kiauchau is borrowed almost textually from the 1895 ultimatum, which may be described as advice given to Japan to renounce possession of Liao-Tung Peninsula as new proof of sincers friendship.

"The bitter fronty with which Japan, after intered speak government had the council of German influence, and I am perfectly well aware that any action which would estrange public opinion in the United States is incompatible with the Anglo-Japanese aliance, which was specially revised only three years ago, so as to exclude such possibilities, and positive assurances have been given all neutral powers having possessions in the Far East.

Clarke Cohen, or Annie Norman, told the detectives how she had first left home and had lived in several cities throughout this State. Later she came to Richmond, and has lived at a number of places here. She further told the police that she had been in the liabit of sending money to her parents, and that they allowed her to come home at will. It was while she was on one of these periodical visits home that she persuaded Cora Padget to return with her to Richmond. Since moving to the house on Spring Hill Street the two women have been only taking their meals there, and have been spending their nights at 112 North Ethelih Street, she said.
